

Lessons from a life in science

Though Luc has declined the invitation to talk about himself, he is happy to share some of the lessons he has learned throughout the last 30 years of working in academia. This will include some of the findings that were encountered outside the comfort of his own expertise and may provide some leads for many young investigators to further explore the many unknowns in human physiology.